English Description

State: A political entity with a unique name that can be simplified into a two-letter abbreviation. This entity started as a politically organized community but eventually united with other political entities becoming a unified body composed of fifty smaller entities. Each individual entity is run by a voted leader that controls the entity on a federal level.

City: A political entity that can be summarized into a large town. There are several of these inside a state, although some might have the same name across different states. The government occasionally sends reports about the demographics of these particular entities such as how many people are living at this particular place. This political entity is also controlled by a voted leader but on a smaller scale than that of the state leaders.
